

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

[Illegible text block]

the 1990s, the number of people with a disability in the United States has increased by 50% (U.S. Census Bureau, 2000).

As a result of the increase in the number of people with disabilities, the need for accessible information has become a national priority. The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) of 1990 has been the primary legislative force behind the development of accessible information.

The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities. The ADA defines information as any material, product, or service that is intended to be disseminated to the general public. The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities. This means that information must be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities.

The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities. This means that information must be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities.

The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities. This means that information must be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities.

The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities. This means that information must be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities.

The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities. This means that information must be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities.

The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities. This means that information must be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities.

The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities. This means that information must be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities.

The ADA requires that information be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities. This means that information must be accessible to people with disabilities in the same manner as it is accessible to people without disabilities.

